

CONNECT, INSPIRE, AND LEAD

Who She Is – Carina Manase, the 2022 IAWA Scholarship Recipient from our partnership with École Nationale de l’Aviation Civile \(ENAC\) in Toulouse, France where she is focused on earning her Masters in Aerospace Systems Navigation and Telecommunication. She is originally from Tanzania and it was at the University of Dar es Salaam that she earned her Bachelor of Science and Communication. In between her academic career, she interned at an engineering firm and a telecommunications firm in Tanzania and further showcased her leadership skills during her academic career. She is further involved in activities that benefit the members of her community that need her support. Among her many languages, she speaks Swahili, English, and French.

Why You Should Listen to Her – Carina puts you at ease with her gratitude, confidence, and humility. One of the many highlights of her application for the IAWA Scholarship include her leadership experiences; the direction where she is heading in her career; and how she is bringing others with her. She has been focused on joining the aviation industry since a young age and remains focused on doing so in a way that is intuitive for her. Her CV highlights her desire to participate in it: “Passionate in Aviation and Technology. Its constant growth and mind-blowing innovations not to mention its undeniable achievements are things that inspires me to stretch out my limits to be a part of it.”

In our podcast, we speak about what attracted her to apply for IAWA’s Scholarship and how IAWA’s Scholarship is “life changing” for her beyond the financial support, which reflects her gratitude to the IAWA community and the investment that it makes to build the pipeline of the next generation of leaders. She speaks about how inspiration can take you so far and that we need to be there to connect to and support others so that we in turn remain focused on our goals when we think we cannot continue. She shares how being a part of IAWA changed her idea of what success means and how that changed her idea of leadership to being focused on understanding the entire community and how you can contribute and support others at any stage of your career. We further speak about the opportunities to join the aviation industry in Africa and how we can foster awareness for careers in our global industry.

How You Can Apply Her Wisdom To Your Career – A few of the take-aways to contemplate:

- What can you do beyond inspiration to develop and sustain your relationships?
- How are you supporting those in your community who are at different stages (more tenured, your peers, and those who are just starting) of their career and what can you gain from providing support to them?
- What can you do to “get your hands dirty” to create the environment for others to grow and thrive?
